The Warren College Writing Program (WCWP) has a two-course sequence, WCWP 10A and 10B, as well as an upper division course, WCWP 100. The purpose of the courses is to enable undergraduate students, through intensive practice, to read and write academic arguments in preparation for their work in various academic disciplines. Classes operate as workshops and center on discussion of academic arguments and student work. Students are introduced to a model of argumentation based on claims, premises, and evidence. A modified portfolio, including three graded writing assignments, is due at the end of the quarter.

Through this process students learn:
- To analyze academic arguments and make thoughtful decisions and connections based on that analysis
- To practice all aspects of the writing process
- To generate ideas for writing using a variety of processes
- To make a claim that is informed by multiple sources
- To incorporate premises and evidence to support a claim
- To cite sources appropriately (according to academic conventions and university policies)
- To integrate sources effectively (use sources in support of one’s own position)
- To use various kinds of feedback to revise effectively
- To develop the ability to reflect on one’s own thinking and writing and to use what is learned on future writing projects.
